Nuclear Laboratory Partners of Canada Honored to Begin Work at Canadian Nuclear Laboratories

By Dennis Carr

Speaking on behalf of everyone at Nuclear Laboratory Partners of Canada Inc., or NLPC as we call it, we are thrilled to be selected as the preferred bidder to manage and operate Canadian Nuclear Laboratories.

All of us at NLPC, including our leadership team and additional staff from our parent companies, have been preparing to manage this transition in a way that minimizes the interruptions on CNL work while still allowing us to get acquainted with your work and better understand day-to-day operations across the various locations.

During transition, we will work with AECL and CNL to find opportunities to be introduced to community stakeholders to begin establishing strong relationships and giving community members the opportunity to ask questions.

In the coming months, we will communicate on our transition activities through our website (www.nlpoc.ca), all-staff meetings as appropriate, and transition bulletins like this one.

Having worked other contract transitions in my career, I understand that a contract change brings the possibility of distraction from the current work scope. Safety is a non-negotiable priority for myself and NLPC more broadly, so I would encourage everyone to stay focused on the job at hand. We will be working closely with AECL and the CNL transition team during transition and will coordinate any onsite employee interactions with them.

In closing, I want to commend the entire CNL workforce for the impressive and important work you have done to date. Canada deserves the best science that we can offer, and our local communities are depending on us to protect the environment where we all live and work. Your efforts are having an important impact now and for future generations, and I'm looking forward to joining you in CNL's critical missions.
